HOW DO YOU DEFINE "EXTRAORDINARY?"

I had the privilege of traveling to some pretty incredible places in 2017. From Maui to the Maldives, I saw beautiful sights, met marvellous people, and checked more than a few items off my bucket list.

But one of my most notable travel moments actually occurred this past January, when I found myself sharing fried fish with my in-laws at a public market in Cartagena, Colombia. While dining on street food wrapped in brown paper may not sound like a once-in-a-lifetime achievement to some, for my travel companions – both historically all-inclusive-loving snowbirds – it was a bucket list item they didn't even know they'd had.

Funny enough, Colombia wasn't on any of our bucket lists when we chose it for our family vacation; we just wanted somewhere sunny, warm and a little different. But there, in a dimly lit corner of the loud and bustling market, as they squeezed lime over their fish and sipped mango juice from mason jars, my family had the unexpected pleasure of discovering something new about themselves: when given the chance, they are adventurous at heart.

Moments like these can be the best part about traveling. A trip can start out as a simple jaunt to warmer weather, then turn into something transformational in the blink of an eye. These are moments that change you and stay with you forever – and they're extremely personal, because really, "extraordinary" experiences mean different things to different people.

Maybe for you, "extraordinary" means tracking gorillas in the jungle (pg. 36), or finding personal fulfillment in a remote Indian paradise (pg. 20). Perhaps it's dining your way through ancient China (pg. 30), or setting new standards for extravagance in glimmering Dubai (pg. 14).

Whatever your 2018 travel dreams consist of, I hope the inspirational stories in these pages will help to freshen up your bucket list, and take you – your heart, mind and body – somewhere completely unexpected.

Happy travels,

Extraordinary experiences for 2018

By Charlotte New

From upscale to off-grid, adventure-packed to low-key, here are our top choices for extraordinary experiences to be had this year.

Royal engagements in London

Britain has long been a favorite destination, and the upcoming nuptials of Prince Harry and Meghan Markle – not to mention a third child for Prince William and Kate – has given us all the more reason to pay a visit. But why not indulge in a little royal treatment along the way? That's exactly what travelers can expect with Luxury Gold's 'British Royale' tour, which offers VIP experiences throughout the nine-day journey. Spend an afternoon with the Duchess of Northumberland, access the Harlow Carr Gardens for an exclusive after-hours tour, and meet a Military Knight after witnessing the Changing of the Guard at Buckingham Palace.

Europe, in style

Bring luxury, cruising and Europe together and you'll be hard-pressed to find a more perfect intersection of experiences; amazing dining onboard and on land plus opportunities for adventure in lesser explored areas, all while comfortable and cared for every step of the way. Crystal Cruises has brought it all together with a 14-day 'Vineyards and Vistas' sailing, where you can be tasting the vintages of Bordeaux, France one day and exploring the medieval streets of Oporto, Portugal the next, before moving on to imbibe the culture and community of Barcelona before a quick stop in Casis, France that leads to two days living the high life in Monte Carlo, Monaco.

The best of the best in South Africa

There's nothing more extraordinary than Mother Earth and all her natural wonder, and there's no place like South Africa to soak it all in – best enjoyed with a local vintage at the end of each day. The 'Regal Retreat' tour by African Travel Inc. gives travelers the best South Africa has to offer, showcasing top destinations in tandem with luxury experiences. Whale-watching off the Cape of Good Hope, summiting Table Mountain and wine tastings in Franschhoek Valley are only a few of the highlights, topped-off with an immersive safari in the Kapama Private Game Reserve, where guests can get up close and personal with its resident elephant herd.

Unplug & recharge in the Society Islands

Sometimes, the best things in life are completely off-grid. Take the pristine blue-green waters that surround the Society Islands – the peace and tranquility, the stillness, the bliss! Pair this with ultra-luxury accommodations and you're set for nothing short of an incredible vacation. Explore the lush rainforests, dive with sharks or simply indulge beachside while enjoying the 10-night 'Society Islands & Tuamotus' with Paul Gaugin, which visits Papeete, Bora Bora, Moorea, and other pieces of this South Pacific paradise.

The spirit & sights of Sri Lanka

Though marks of civil war still exist throughout, Sri Lanka is rousing interest from travelers far and wide. Unique in its identity and with ancient traditions ingrained in its existence, this tropical island boasts striking landscapes, UNESCO World Heritage Sites, and diverse wildlife. Insider Journeys offers both group and private tours, either way allowing travelers to immerse themselves in this country's Buddhist culture and picturesque landscapes. The 'Sri Lanka Discovery Tour' ventures from top sites such as the ancient ruins of Anuradhapura to Sigiriya Rock near the town of Dambulla, while also incorporating visits to quiet villages and the island's beaches.

VIP touring in Germany

What's a more unique souvenir to take home than a custom car? When visiting the BMW Museum in Munich, you could really make it happen. Though the take-home would come with a hefty price tag, the perks are many – from airport pick-up to chauffeur service, and other VIP treatments. But if you're looking for a different type of tour when visiting Deutschland, a river cruise might be a more accessible option. Avalon River Cruises offers many itineraries that showcase towns along the Rhine. For a truly memorable experience, consider a Christmas cruise and marvel at the castles and markets dressed in festive décor. Plus, this would be the perfect opportunity to find a souvenir that would actually fit in your suitcase.

Two sides of Japan

It seems as though the world is finally awakening to the wonders of Japan, a country that has not, thus far, been given the credit it deserves for its diverse and varied offerings. One day might consist of visits to Buddhist temples and quiet mountain villages, and the next, you may be buzzing from the energy that comes with visiting its mega-cities.

Alexander + Roberts' 'From Japan's Inland Sea to the Alps' tour showcases this multifaceted country, with a visit to the rural mountain hamlet of Shirakawago and stops at five UNESCO World Heritage Sites all on the itinerary. Embrace local culture and practices, made all the more memorable through a sushi-making lesson in Tokyo and dinner with an apprentice Geisha in Kyoto.

End of the Earth activities in Antarctica

As the world and climate changes, destinations that are especially threatened by issues such as global warming are in particularly high demand, putting Antarctica on many a "must do" list for 2018. And certainly, a trip to the end of the earth is nothing short of extraordinary.

Silversea continues to explore this region, with countless departures onboard the Silver Cloud Expedition and Silver Explorer. Navigate past icebergs while enjoying afternoon tea, or take advantage of the opportunities to see penguins, leopard seals, and other marine mammals in the world's southern-most continent, all of which amounts to a truly once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

Leave the world behind as you meet your personal hammam attendant, who will be your companion throughout this hands-on treatment of black soap baths, steam rooms and hot marble massages. # Indulge in DUBAI

By Britney Hope

From Dubai's sparkling, mirage-like cityscape to its golden desert sands, this Middle Eastern escape is positively brimming with unbelievable bucket list experiences. Here are just a few elite-level exploits you can find in the always-captivating "City of Superlatives."

SLALOM IN A LAND OF SAND

Dubai is a land of stark contrasts, and its ability to marry both snow and sand is just another way it defies the impossible. Ski Dubai, located in the legendary Mall of the Emirates, is an indoor ski resort – and the first of its kind in the Middle East. With nearly 27,000 square yards of fresh manmade powder, visitors seeking reprieve from the blazing sun can choose from five different slopes built for skiers of all experience levels. For more family fun, the adjacent Snow Park offers toboggan hills, live penguin marches and a chilly café that serves up hot chocolate for any desert dwellers needing to warm up.

SOAR BESIDE THE SUNRISE

You haven't really seen the Arabian Desert until you've seen it from 4,000 feet high. Take to the early morning skies in a prismatic hot air balloon, and watch the sun steal over the craggy Hajar Mountains, tinting the world around you a deep, copper color. As your pilot negotiates the daybreak breeze, everything else falls away, leaving you suspended between a sweeping expanse of sand and sky as you try to remember to breathe. As one of Dubai's most popular tour options, most balloon rides include a hotel pickup and post-ride refreshments. The feeling of floating above the planet in the peaceful light of dawn, however, is free of charge.

MASTER AN ANCIENT ART

Ideal for nature lovers and history buffs alike, private falconry sessions blend the beauty of the desert wilds with an exhilarating, noble sport. Once the hunting method of choice for nomadic Bedouin tribes, travelers can now learn the art of falconry at the Dubai Desert Conservation Resort, a national park with lots of room for spreading wings. A hotel pickup and scenic drive kicks off a day of hands-on training with fearful birds of prey. Feel like a true falconer collecting food for his family as you slip on a thick, leather glove and learn to hunt with these kings of the sky.

Ancient wellness treatments in Kerala

By Doug O'Neill

The tropical province of Kerala, India, is the birthplace of Ayurveda, a 5,000-year-old wellness tradition based on the harmony of one's body, mind, and soul.

HOW TO EXPLORE KERALA

Kerala, the southernmost province of India, is a soothing antidote to the madding crowds of Varanasi or the Taj Mahal. G Adventures' South India: Explore Kerala – seven-days, Kochi to Vypin Island itinerary features languid afternoons on a houseboat in the backwaters of tropical Alleppey, strolls along Cherai Beach, and enlightening talks with a spice expert in Kochi. Those who venture into this ancient land will visit the Tripunithura Hill Palace, ramble through the green paddy fields of Kumarakom, and have the chance to luxuriate in an afternoon massage on Vypin Island.

A gentle breeze sweeps in from the Arabian Sea, causing the white linen curtains in my treatment room to billow ever so slightly. Save for the steady drip of herb-infused oil from a copper pot suspended above my head, it's all stillness and quiet here at Somatheeram Ayurvedic Beach Resort in Kovalam, Kerala, India.

Stretched out and face up on a hand-carved teak tabletop, wearing what can be best described as a minimalist loincloth, I dreamily submit to my first Ayurvedic experience.

Each drop of lukewarm oil onto my forehead (my eyes protected by a damp cloth) lulls me deeper and deeper into a state of sheer relaxation. Muscle tension dissipates. Worries flee. When my attendant first explained Shirodhara therapy, a form of Ayurveda, I thought I'd be unsettled by an oil-on-the-forehead treatment. But not so: A welcome warmth spreads throughout my entire body.

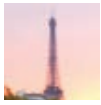

Ayurveda, which is Sanskrit for "the science of life," is a holistic healing practice that began in India more than 5,000 years ago, long favored by everyday working folk as well as the royal families of the Maharajas. Kerala is the epicenter of Ayurvedic medicine, attracting legions of visitors who sign up for rejuvenation therapy, detoxification/body purification, stress management, weight loss, anti-aging and beauty care programs, among others. Many health-minded visitors, like me, simply seek to reboot, while others look to Ayurvedic medicine to address concerns such as arthritis, heart disease, severe anxiety, acne and persistent insomnia.

Ayurvedic regimens, which last anywhere from a few days to a few weeks (though one-time treatments are available), begin with an assessment by a doctor trained in the science of Ayurveda. (There are plenty of Ayurvedic centers throughout Kerala.) The ultimate goal is to bring equilibrium to the body, mind, and spirit by balancing the three elemental energies: Vata (air/space), Pitta (fire/water), and Kapha (water/earth). This is achieved through various combinations of oils (mostly herb-infused), massages and dietary changes to rid the body of toxins.

My prescribed treatments – which one day includes a skin-softening buttermilk bath – take place each morning. Afterward, I'm free to wander the 15-acre grounds of Somatheeram (the world's first resort-style Ayurvedic treatment center), lunch on vegetarian curry served atop plantain leaves, loll on a nearby beach, or (admittedly) grab a mid-day nap in my private bungalow. Late afternoons are sacrosanct: meditation, followed by outdoor yoga.

I awake on day three feeling energetic yet peaceful, my body free of tension – physical and emotional. I am greedy for more, so I opt for the much-talked-about, four-handed Pizhichil hot-oil massage. Face down on the wood table this time, I feel the rhythmic, synchronized hand motions of two attendants as they massage heated herbal oil directly onto my shoulders, neck, and back. One attendant, Surej, assures me that the warm oil extracts will enhance blood circulation, relieve muscle pain – and equally important – "boost the spirit."

It certainly does: I return home on a Kerala high.

FLAVORS, AFLOAT: Tasting China's Eastern Coast

By Sarah Treleven

For intrepid travelers hoping to explore a small sampling of a very large region, sailing on the newly upgraded Crystal Symphony offers both easy passage and creature comforts.

My boyfriend and I knew we only had a few hours in each port as we sailed north along the Chinese coast aboard the Crystal Symphony, and we were determined to spend them wisely.

Not that we didn't love being onboard; our Crystal voyage was the perfect mode of transport for tasting our way through China's diverse food culture. In addition to the remarkable pleasures of opening the curtains every morning to a new destination, the elegant ship also replicated the creature comforts of home—a sublime complement to long days spent exploring exotic locales.

We started in Hong Kong. Working our way down narrow, bustling Wellington Street, we sampled bowls of shrimp wonton noodle soup, a Cantonese specialty. Next, in the pretty port town of Xiamen, we dove into sweetened peanut soup and buns stuffed with chives and pork fat, and then wandered into a small shop where the proprietor made us cups of strong Pu'er, a fermented black tea.

Shanghai was a little different because I had a specific goal: I wanted to track down the legendary "Mr. Lu," a septuagenarian who was rumored to make some of the country's best scallion-pork pancakes from his back alley shop, located somewhere among the French Concession's winding streets. When we finally found him, we lined up for 45 minutes, eagerly watching the slow-moving Mr. Lu roll every pancake by hand and then gently place it inside an extremely hot oven. The pancakes were crispy and chewy, enlivened by savory pieces of pork and sharp scallions.

Each day, after exploring the monuments and laneways of multiple Chinese ports, I was thrilled to return to a glass of Champagne on deck as we set sail, watching the city lights disappear behind us as the sun dipped in the sky. We indulged in rich duck ragu and handmade pasta in the ship's restaurant, Prego, and tender fresh fish from its onboard Nobu-inspired Umi Uma & Sushi Bar. On days at sea, we relaxed in the spa's steam room and then set up camp in the elegant Palm Court, sipping cappuccinos and eating cookies while scanning the horizon for passing ships.

By the time we got to Beijing, you might expect me to tell you that I was kind of full. But that would be a lie. When we disembarked, I made a beeline to hand-pulled noodles and crispy-skinned Peking duck slowly roasted over datewood. I was happy to be onshore, once again focused on regional delicacies. I'll admit it was bittersweet to bid adieu to the Crystal Symphony—the perfect floating home for two weeks spent exploring China from top to bottom.

What to expect when you're sailing in style...

The Crystal Symphony just completed an extensive redesign, complete with a number of upgrades. Here's what you can look forward to on your next sailing:

Encounters on the

Tracking Uganda's rare, endangered mountain gorillas in a protected park is a once-in-a-lifetime experience.

By Vawn Himmelsbach

We've only been hiking the mist-shrouded mountains of Uganda's Bwindi Impenetrable Forest for a short time when our guide, Niyibizi Goreth, tells us our trackers have spotted the Rushegura family. A ripple of hushed excitement passes through the group — after all, this is no ordinary family. We go off-trail as Goreth — one of the park's few female rangers — slices through the foliage with a machete. That's when reality takes hold.

When I woke up that morning, I was excited by the prospect of seeing a gorilla. Now, out in the bush, it seems like a crazy idea. This is no petting zoo — these gorillas live in the wild, and there are no barriers to separate them from us. But when we spot a fuzzy brown mass hanging by one arm from a tree branch, all fear dissipates: there is only a sense of awe.

MOUNTAIN

Bwindi, a protected park and one of the oldest rainforests in Africa (dating back more than 25,000 years), is home to more than half of the world's remaining mountain gorillas. They can only be found here, as well as in neighboring Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Presently, there are nine gorilla families in the forest that have been habituated by park rangers to tolerate the presence of humans — a process that takes several years.

As we stand quietly among the trees, we see other members of the Rushegura family: One young male slides down a branchless tree like a fire pole into a scuffle with a few other males — apparently over a piece of fruit. A mother carries a tiny fur-ball of a baby on her back; two others delicately groom each other. The silverback, identified as the leader of the group with a distinctive streak of silver fur running down his back, sits alone against a tree, eyeing us.

As one of the last remaining gorilla sanctuaries in Africa, access to this region is strictly controlled. You need a permit for gorilla tracking, and groups are limited to no more than eight people per gorilla family per day. Permits are limited and must be purchased in advance; they include the services of an experienced park ranger, trackers and porters.

While you're allotted about an hour to spend with the gorillas, you don't know in advance how long it will take to find them — half an hour or half a day. That's because gorillas are always on the move in search of food, and don't sleep in the same place for two consecutive nights. Our hour flies by and, reluctantly, we head back to park headquarters, taking a shortcut by hopping over rocks in a rushing river. Suddenly, while waiting for my turn to cross, a hulking male gorilla stalks up the path behind me.

I'm rooted to the spot as he brushes past me — it's thrilling and terrifying all at the same time. I have to remind myself to breathe. Never in my life did I expect to be this close to a wild gorilla, so close I can feel his stiff fur against my pant leg. These gorillas may be habituated, but there was never any guarantee we'd see any, or that they'd let us get this close. I'm just a guest in this impenetrable forest, and I feel privileged — and humbled — to be in their presence.
